Facebook bans Milo Yiannopoulos and Alex Jones for hate speech

Facebook has designated several extremist figures as “dangerous” — including Infowars host Alex Jones, political commentator Milo Yiannopoulos and conspiracy theorist Laura Loomer — and permanently banned them. The New York Post said the social media giant removed the accounts, fan pages and groups related to the high-profile personalities after it re-evaluated their content or re-examined their activities outside Facebook, the Washington Post reported. “We’ve always banned individuals or organisations that promote or engage in violence, regardless of ideology,” Facebook said in a statement. “The process for looking at offenders takes a long time and it is what made us decide to remove these accounts today.”

Jones and InfoWars also have been banned from Facebook since August 2018, but had continued to use Instagram, which is owned by Facebook. On Thursday (local time), Jones and his media outlet will also be stopped from posting on Instagram, where he and other extremists and right-wing celebrities have spoken about conspiracy theories, false information and extremist thought. Jones recently hosted Gavin McInnes, the leader of the Proud Boys, which the company labelled as a hate figure in December. Yiannopoulos praised McInnes publicly this year, and Loomer appeared with him at a rally. Others who have been banned include YouTube personality and conspiracy theorist Paul Joseph Watson and racist Paul Nehlen, who ran for Congress in 2016 and 2018.

Conservatives got angry at the news on Twitter. YouTube personality and conspiracy theorist Paul Watson is among those banned. “(I) was given no reason. I broke none of their rules,” he said. Mark Dice, another social media conspiracy theorist, said the people banned had been “unpersoned by Facebook’s most recent clean up. (They have been) labelled ‘dangerous individuals’ (and) banned for life. This control is beyond anti-American. It’s truly Orwellian. Everyone should speak out against this.”

A Facebook representative told CNN Business that the company goes through a lengthy process and looks at several factors before deciding if a person is “dangerous.” Such factors include whether the person or organisation has ever called for violence against people based on race, ethnicity or national origin; whether the person has been identified with a hateful ideology; whether they use hate speech in their social media profiles; and whether they have had pages or groups removed from Facebook for violating hate-speech rules. Facebook has been careful about offending conservatives, who have said that the company unfairly stops their speech. Thursday’s announcement is likely to be welcomed by people who want greater freedom who have long argued that these people promote violent and hateful views and that social media companies should not allow their apps and websites to be used as a place to spread these views.
